

Video uploaded then copied into several different file formats with different levels of quality

Each version of the video is chopped up into packets, these packets are sent over wi-fi or mobile service from data centers

YouTube's servers receive packets that is transferred to the users browser, these packets are sent through wireless and wired connections

These packets are layed out to provide the viewer with the best quality

